

COACH MPILO

SAMPLE ADVERT

Are you a man who's living with HIV and doing great?
We might have a job for you as a coach!

Think back to the moment you learned that you had HIV. For a lot of men, it feels like life is over. But Coach Mpilo knows that isn't true. It's possible to live a happy, healthy, normal life with HIV.

If you know that too, you could be the right person to become a coach. Coaches give advice and support to men who are struggling to adjust to life with HIV and need to talk to someone who has been there.

The Coach Mpilo Program aims to improve HIV treatment linkage and retention among men living with HIV by providing personalized peer support from someone who has been there.

We're recruiting a new team of coaches to be based in the City of Johannesburg.

Here's what we are looking for:

- A man who is living with HIV and has been on treatment for at least a year
- A man who is open and confident about his HIV status, and rejects any HIV stigma
- A man who enjoys talking and listening to people and helping them with their

What does coach do?

- Reaches out to men living with HIV in his community to see if they need support.
- Gives them advice and support for starting and staying on HIV treatment.
- Works together with the clinic to make sure his men continue to do well.
- Reports regularly to his squad manager on the status of each of his men.

How does it work?

- If you are selected, we will give you one week of training on how to be a coach, and then your squad manager will be available to provide you with ongoing support.
- You will be based in your community and will check in with the clinic at least weekly.
- The clinic will help you to find men with HIV who may need your support. You will also put up posters in the community letting people know that support is available.
